INTERDISCIPLINARY STUDIES

Office of the Dean

Dear SIS Students,

Welcome back to TCU and SIS for the 2022 spring semester. It is my esteemed pleasure to write you in my capacity as the new Dean for the School of Interdisciplinary Studies. The goal of my deanship is to serve and support you along with my capable leadership team and exemplary faculty and staff, who, like me, care enough to give you all of the very best that fortifies our individual leadership, teaching, mentoring, and advisory support.

From this day forth, we wish to impress upon you daily that each of our SIS students matter to us individually, collectively, and as an academic unit committed to transforming the world and bringing global freedoms to all. I am available to you always and expect every SIS faculty, staff, and administrative leader will respect your total student experience by never faltering in providing you the premium education each of you deserves. To me, you are one of the world's most precious of natural resources. May your every day as a SIS student at TCU dignify you, your educational ambitions, and the various communities we trust you will serve across a lifetime grounded in all of your studies within SIS.

Indeed, your future as a SIS student remains bright and secure. Together, our Dean's office, faculty, and staff welcome the numerous opportunities to lead, teach, mentor, and advise you with a first-rate attention to student success that empowers each of you to make and leave your own indelible marks on global society in ways that only your total SIS experience can make possible.

All the best and always,
